Elephants

Elephants are the largest land animals and are the largest living mammals on Earth today.

Elephants are herbivores. They eat plants and grasses. They use their trunks to pick up and pull down leaves and twigs to eat.

Elephants are primarily brown, but they can also be black, red, and white.

Elephants are born with a trunk that is only a few inches long. It grows longer as they get older.

Elephants use their trunks for many things, including drinking water, touching, and holding things.
